"Service"

Hi friends. Today I want to tell you a story of a man named Jack. He was a servant. Jack was a parts man. He worked at a local Chevrolet dealership in the parts department.

In car dealerships there is the "front-end" and "back-end." The front-end is where the cars and trucks are parked. There is even a place called the "show room." There are a lot of big windows and glass doors to enhance the view of the vehicles. The people that work in the front are the sales people and managers. They dress nice and smile a lot (and sometimes talk fast).

The back-end of a dealership houses the parts and service departments. Things aren't as shiny in the back-end. The doors are made of metal and wood and there aren't very many windows. It feels like a massive unfinished garage. There is even a distinctive smell in the parts & service departments... it's a unique blend of sweat, grease, dust, and paint. The people that work in the back-end wear different clothes than those in the front. Their clothes are made to get dirty.

Jack was a friendly guy but never one to be up-front in either the car dealership or anywhere else. He had an easy way about him that seemed to put others at ease. He was quick with a smile and quicker to ask how he could help. His whole life he worked in the parts business. His dad had been a parts man and he followed in his footsteps. He also had an uncanny ability to remember numbers and this came in handy because every part is identified by a set of numbers. After only a few years, he was asked to manage the dealership's parts department.

Jack built a reputation for customer service. He kept a map of the United States on a wall of the parts department. It had little pins with colored balls on the end. The map was riddled with these pins marking everywhere they had sent parts to customers. The funny thing was the dealership was just a little operation in a small town.

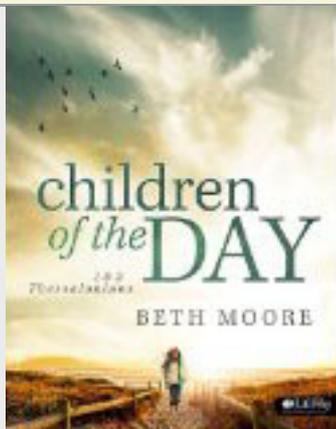

On many occasions Jack would get a call after hours from someone passing through town who was in need of a part because they were broken down. Many dinner meals were cut short, sleep was lost, and weekends were punctuated with a quick trip down to the dealership to help get someone back on the road. More than one long-haul trucker or farmer, or average Joe wrote thank you notes to Jack after the fact.

Jack got paid to serve, so you might think his service was conditional. Yes, he earned a living selling auto parts, but he was a servant at his core. People were important to Jack. It didn't matter what they looked like, smelled like, or talked like; Jack thought people were special and he treated them as such. Jack was also a follower of the Lord Jesus. When he was serving all those people, he was really serving his Master, the Lord Jesus.

Jack was my dad; Jack McNay. He was a great example to me of how the Lord Jesus wants me to treat others. I want to be like him.

Your brother and friend,
shaun
